Hot Tips from the Art Department!

1. Layered, three-dimensional art has been a trademark of Holly Berry House Originals since the beginning of its twenty-five year history. The question is...why not? It brings a whole new level of interaction with the eye and brings many things, especially nature related, to life. In your collection of rubber stamps you most likely have many, many images that will lend themselves to that third dimension. Look for parts of any image that, if they were real, would be in the front of everything in the image. Also look for parts of the image that are complete, without anything interrupting the full outline of that part. Stamp an extra image and just cut out that part. Pieces may be glued on flat or slightly curved and layered with double sticky cushion.

2. Everyone has their favorite type of stamp...mounted or unmounted. Both have their attractive features and both have certain drawbacks.

Wood mounted stamps, in general, have a much thicker foundation to grasp on to. That matters when trying to make a perfect image. They also will forever help protect your image from damage, including keeping it nice and flat. Wood mounted stamps hold their value far better, especially if they are very sought after images that have become discontinued.

Un-mounted stamps are obviously a solution to a large collection where storage becomes a problem. Most important is how they are stored. They should never be stored in a bent or curved position. They should never be pressed into a tight space that might put an indentation on any portion of the image.

Both mounted and un-mounted stamps should be kept away from extreme heat or cold, kept out of direct sunlight and kept dry, especially in humid climates.

The Keystone Snow Diamond

In a rare moment of spare time, Engla answered the call for a class by three members of the Holly Berry House staff. They gathered to learn the technique for creating the spectacular Keystone Snow Diamond snowflake. They all did a terrific job and, as you can tell by their big smiles, they had a great time. Meet Larry McCollum, chief vulcanizer and producer of the beautiful Holly Berry House Originals wood mounts; Anna Nowrot, computer genius and webmaster; and Rhonda McDaniels, Administrative Assistant and all around rescuer! Thank you Engla Pickett, Instructor Extraordinaire!

The Keystone Diamond is one of three masterpiece Snow Diamonds that each secretly hold images for 12 or 15 individual snowflakes, all in one image. With them you can create amazing three dimensional cards, large snowflake garlands and window art, hanging ornaments, stunning package toppers and more.

Merry Christmas
